EXPLANATORY INTRODUCTION

This list of authors and titles is offered to American public libraries hoping that it may be of some aid to them in replacing fiction. Of the making of lists for librarians there is no end, and the only justification for another is that the book world (the world of fiction in particular) moves at such an accelerated rate of speed that authors are out of favor, or their books are out of print almost before the ink dries on the latest list. The editors of this particular list have been at considerable pains to compare editions and verify prices, but there is no doubt that by the time it is first used, some parts of it will have become out of date.

Nor is this its only defect. It has been the intention of the Committee to give in brief compass the most frequently replaced of worth-while titles in the best and cheapest editions in print. It is obvious that unanimity could not be obtained, because the same titles are not replaced in all libraries with equal frequency, and no two individuals are so like minded that they will agree on the authors to be excluded. It was necessary to take up a position, however, and this placed the final responsibility for selection on the Committee. Its conception of worth-while authors may not (and unquestionably will not) be that of the various users of the list. But the Committee believes that most of the titles will be replaced with frequency by a good many of America's public libraries. Those titles which they customarily buy, but which they look for in vain on the list, they may continue to purchase without sense of sin, for this list is tenet only, and not dogma. It should be borne in mind, moreover, that the best of titles, if replaced only once in two or three years, will not necessarily be found here. In short, the purpose of the list is not to select the best fiction, but to aid the order department in finding quickly the edition best suited for frequent replacement.

To discover such titles the Committee has drawn upon the experience of a number of public libraries situated in different parts of the country. A tentative list, to serve as a basis for selection, was found to exist in the Chicago Public Library. Mr. Roden kindly agreed to the use of this list as a starting point. It was distributed among a dozen or so libraries, with a request for additions or deductions. These enlarged lists were consolidated by Charles N. Baxter of the Blackstone Memorial Library at Branford, Conn., H. L. Cowing of the New Haven Public Library, and Orlando C. Davis of the Bridgeport Public Library. The revised lists were then gone over by Esther Johnston and Jennie Flexmer of the New York Public Library, who made a selection of the titles to be included. William Webb of the Flint Public Library chose most of the editions and a final check on prices was made by J. J. McConkey of the American News Company. The public libraries which cooperated were: Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., Albany, Boston, Baltimore, Evansville, Ind., Kansas City, Mo., Wichita, Los Angeles, Louisville, Springfield, Mass., Detroit, Houston, Flint, Mich., Brooklyn, New York, Hoyt Public Library of Kingston, Penn., Richmond; and the Emory University Library. At the time this list was sent to the printer, therefore, the information was approximately correct.

Absence of some popular authors and titles will be noticed at once. This is explained by the decision to eliminate as far as practicable the lower grades of fiction, even though they circulate readily. It was felt that a good deal of this class of fiction is available in cheap popular copyright editions and therefore did not constitute a buying problem; and further, that most libraries, in these days of reduced book budgets, would prefer to let the rental libraries carry the burden. Another decision was to include some authors of second-rate fiction only, if some of the titles were available in cheap editions. It was kept steadily in mind that the list was to be used for replacement purposes only, and as one reviser succinctly stated, "All of us buy new mediocrities, but it is not necessary to replace them." It should be borne in mind also that non-fiction is excluded. Such titles as Two years before the mast were dropped for that reason. Titles of distinctly juvenile interest were also excluded; and such old favorites as Prue and I were omitted because the present generation is little interested in them.

Printed in connection with the list is a report on the ideal physical specifications of a cheap but good edition. Since this report was drawn up in consultation with the Book Clinic (composed of book manufacturing experts) the specifications are believed to be practicable as well. The report is the work of J. W. Rogers and E. M. Berry of the School of Library Service, Columbia University, and was read by Dr. Hellmut Lehmann-Haupt of the Columbia University Library. Since Dr. Lehmann-Haupt is known to believe that books can be attractive and well made, it is the hope of the Committee that the report, printed in connection with a list of books which can be sold in large editions, may lead American publishers to follow the specifications in the field of established fiction. No mention of price is made in the report, but it seems quite possible that fiction priced at about one dollar could be made without sacrifice of quality or attractiveness. This is undoubtedly true if the books are reprinted from plates and a large edition can be sold. Many English publishers have shown that this is possible, and a few American publishers have also demonstrated the fact. Price has been given full consideration in the List, because of reduced budgets and the necessity for economy. For that reason, where no cheap American edition is available, an English edition was substituted; for importation is possible, free of duty, under the American copyright law. English prices are particularly attractive as an economy measure at the time this is written because the shilling is worth only about 16-1/2 cents. For the benefit of libraries who do not care to import, the American edition is also given, except in those cases where the difference is too great.

The question of series was also considered by Mr. Rogers and Mr. Berry, who give some sound advice on the use of worn out or unsatisfactory plates in reprints. A brief description of some of the cheaper series, to which Eliza Marquess of the New York Public Library contributed, is appended. It would be impossible to include all series, but the descriptive notes should be of use to librarians who cannot familiarize themselves with the large and increasing number of publishers' series.

It should be added that some editions to be found on the list are not approved by the Committee. They are included only because no satisfactory edition can be found in print. An opportunity exists here for enterprising publishers who may wish to discover established titles out of copyright which can be sold in large editions at a low price.

It is the belief of the Committee, after a study of the fiction field, that American novels are, in general, priced too high. This is particularly true of good titles which continue in demand. Too many established works of merit are priced at $2.50 or $3.00, and the new price level, in effect since 1931, has not been reflected, as yet, in many publishers' back lists. In an editorial on the depressed state of the book trade, in the Saturday Review of Literature, November 26, 1932, is to be found the following significant sentence: "Nor does there seem to be, at the moment, much hope of lower costs in production, except for standardized reprints of wide possible circulation for each title, or for the comparatively few books which are guaranteed a wide sale in advance."

This report does not attack the question of omnibus books and collections of short stories as vigorously as the subject deserves. The omnibus volume promises great economy, but it usually has the fault of thin paper or inner margins too narrow for binding on account of its great bulk. The English have gone further than American publishers in experimenting with this book form. The W. H. Smith Company of London have issued a catalog of titles available in omnibus form, and also a catalog of fiction selected from the standpoint of cost. For the information contained in these catalogs they will be found useful.

A work for the future is the compilation of the more popular short stories of certain authors, to the end that some publisher may issue them in a single volume.

SPECIFICATIONS FOR LIBRARY REPRINTS

The object of these suggestions is to indicate specifications regarding the physical make-up of volumes of fiction suitable for public library use. Fiction as it is originally issued by a publisher is logically intended for the book-buying public, who, on the whole, neither require permanence in binding nor are able to discriminate between good and bad workmanship. In libraries, however, the wearing quality of a binding is a matter of much concern, so much so that numerous binders deal exclusively with libraries. These firms endeavor to add long life to books that would otherwise be sold as waste paper, although few of the binders make any great pretensions toward adding attractiveness to their work. The purpose of these specifications is to encourage the publisher to issue the titles in question in a format that will approximate the strength of "library binding" and will match the attractiveness of trade editions of fiction as normally issued.

The question of cost of materials is naturally a matter for attention, yet it is believed that quantity production will enable publishers to issue these books at only a very small added manufacturing expense, an expense the librarian will be willing to bear if the costs of rebinding can be eliminated by means of the longer life thus given the book. That this deserves close consideration by specialists in the computing of manufacturing costs goes without saying. It seems evident, however, that cooperation between publisher and librarian should be secured without difficulty, for their mutual benefit. A few publishers who have listened sympathetically to the pleas of librarians have already, in point of fact, brought certain out-of-print titles back expressly for the library trade. Such enterprise deserves the gratitude of librarians. It is hoped that publishers in general will find it advantageous to grant the requests of the American Library Association regarding the list of proposed "library reprints" now in process of formulation.

The recommendations made here represent preliminaries to more detailed and more accurate specifications which may logically follow. It is expected that whatever specific points have been omitted will be governed by the general rules of good bookmaking. It is particularly desirable that the phases of book manufacture here considered be given careful attention by the manufacturer, inasmuch as library experience shows book manufacturing methods to be chiefly at fault in these particulars. Other than this, the ordinary rules of manufacture are to be followed.

Size and Proportion

It is recommended that sizes be those now generally favored for fiction. In the case of reprints from plates or standing type the size is naturally governed to a certain extent. But as far as possible, excessively large and small sizes should be avoided. Specifically, the board dimensions should not be less than about 4"x7" nor more than about 6"x9". These dimensions may often require modification, but it is recommended that the smaller specification be not decreased. Small books are particularly objectionable in a library.

In the question of proportion the same rules of good taste apply to reprinting for library use as to any other kind of good bookmaking. This should be kept in mind especially when reprinting from plates of a given size. There should be a definite relation between the proportions of the type matter and the proportions of the entire page. In many of the existing reprints this point has been neglected.

Book Papers

Kinds of paper to be used will depend upon the length of each particular book, and upon the size and style of type and the size of type page to be used. Durability is the chief item of importance, naturally, and automatically rules out a large bulk of mechanically made wood-pulp papers. While it is unlikely that bulking will be considered necessary with these fiction titles, since most of them are of more or less standard length, it is Featherweight paper is stiff, is unpleasant to the touch when the leaves of a book are allowed to flip through the fingers, and is difficult to bind securely. It should never, therefore, be used for bulking. If a novel of less than ordinary length comes up for attention it should be allowed to fall naturally into a thin format. If a short novel is being reset and it seems desirable to go to unusual lengths to secure added thickness to the volume, this should be done by decreasing the dimensions of the type page, by using a larger size of type, increasing the amount of leading, or, better, by a combination of the three.

The grain of the paper should always run parallel with the backbone of the book, whether the paper is laid or wove. There are several methods by which the grain of the paper can be ascertained, which will enable the printer to be safe in this matter. In laid paper detection of the grain is particularly easy as the chain marks always indicate its direction.

Laid paper is acceptable for certain types of fiction, but in general a good quality machine-made wove rag paper should be used. It takes a fine impression and is easiest on the eyes of the reader. Various weights are appropriate, of course, according to the length of the book, but extremes of heaviness and bulkiness on the one hand, and of lightness and thinness on the other, should be carefully avoided.

Mechanical wood-pulp paper such as is used for newspapers should not be used for books. This paper will soon rot, turn brown and fall to pieces. This does not mean that wood-pulp paper is not desirable. Paper made from one hundred per cent chemical wood-pulp is today believed to be as lasting as all-rag paper. The fibers of chemical wood-pulp are long and of great strength, and require a minimum of bleaching to secure a white paper. All the impurities have been removed, and it is not yet possible to assert definitely that it is inferior to "rag paper."

Nothing is gained by the imitation deckle-edges favored by so many publishers today. The same holds true of the rough edges, secured artificially by the use of a machine at some stage of the manufacturing process, by sandpapering by hand, or by leaving the edges untrimmed so that the natural unevenness of the sheets at side and bottom and the later necessary cutting of the folds produces rough edges. Uncut edges are particularly troublesome to librarians, for they must all be cut before the book is put into circulation. Otherwise, careless cutting by a reader will result in many torn pages. It is therefore recommended that edges be trimmed flush all round.

A good printer will consider the type face being used when selecting the paper. Certain faces require harder papers than others. The printer is urged to follow the dictates of good workmanship in this regard.

Coated papers should be used only when made necessary by color or half-tone plates. It is better to use a good coated paper for plates, and a good machine-made wove paper for the text, than to print both illustrations and text upon one grade of paper, which, by trying to serve two purposes, serves neither best. It is better still to use an illustrative process that will permit the illustrations to be printed upon the same paper as the text, eliminating coated papers and all the difficulties they present. Colored papers and those having eccentric surface patterns are not recommended.

Type Faces and Plates

The majority of books--particularly in the "popular copyrights" classification--needed for library use must of necessity be reprinted from existing plates or not at all. Good, bad and indifferent typography must be accepted as it was originally done. Recommendations are thus limited to the use of existing tools.

Plates should first be cleaned and put in good repair.

A paper, as stated before, suitable to the type should be selected, and above all the size of the book page should be adapted to the size of the type page. Here it should be kept in mind that, for reasons that are noted later, ample margins are in all cases necessary. One of the chief objections to modern reprints is the inadequacy of margins.

While in most cases the reprinting of these editions will be done from plates already made up, it is advisable that recommendations regarding type faces be included here for such titles as may be reset. The first necessity is that the faces used be simple, for readability is one of our chief concerns. Again, the suitability of a particular face to a particular type of novel must be kept in mind. These two features must be considered conjointly in each individual case, and neither sacrificed for the preservation of the other. In this matter the discretion of the designer is earnestly solicited, for there are no hard and fast rules that can be set down. Every book has an individuality which should in some manner be interpreted in its design.

In the matter of readability, type sizes are an important consideration. Twelve-point seems the most comfortable reading size, and is always leaded one or two points. For longer novels, smaller sizes may be used, but never smaller than ten-point.

When ten-point is used it is preferably leaded two points. Each book, of course, will present its own problems, but in general the leading between lines should not be so great as to cause a feeling that the lines are falling apart, nor so close that it is a strain to avoid confusion of adjacent lines in the vision of the reader.

Spacing between words should be even and unobtrusive to the eye. There should be a careful avoidance of white spots on a page, particularly following periods, where common practice usually calls for the insertion of a space. Careful attention to details in such matters will produce a restful and rapid reading page.

Reprinting by the Photo-Litho-Offset Process

Investigation is encouraged of methods of reprinting other than from plates. It is wholly within reason that books might be reprinted economically through the use of some variety of the photo-litho-offset process. The photographic reprint, if well done, is difficult to distinguish from the type-printed original. This method of reprinting is considerably cheaper than resetting type, and its possibilities in connection with books needed by libraries must be considered.

This pamphlet has been reproduced by planograph, a photographic process. The typewritten sheets were photographed and at the same time reduced.

One of the advantages of the offset process is that it has made possible the printing of fine half-tone screens on a rough paper stock; thus a unity of illustration and typography is secured which will outweigh in many cases the loss in clearness resulting from the use of a relief process of half-tone printing.

It is recommended that this process be considered as an economical method of reprinting books for which the cost of resetting in type would be unprofitable to the publisher, for printing illustrated books, and for reproducing in this country superior foreign editions of the classics.

Illustrations

Illustrations are not essential to "popular copyrights," nor to reprint editions generally and can usually be omitted without serious loss. The use of cheap and banal cinema photographs to illustrate good books cannot be too strongly condemned. The omission of illustrations is unquestionably justified if a saving in manufacturing cost can thereby be secured. An equally important reason, however, is the fact that in comparatively few cases does the illustrator work in complete harmony with author and designer. It is not universally recognized by publishers that illustrations often do not add to the attractiveness of a book, nor that the possible increased sales because of them do not sufficiently warrant their cost.

It is true, of course, that illustrations do often bring a profit to a book. In the instance of the books under consideration, however, it is assumed that the popularity of the titles will assure their selection by the reading public without other recommendation. With this added reason it is considered especially unwise to include illustrations in these reprints.

Where illustrations are planned for a title, however, some recommendations will be pertinent. If colored illustrations are to be included, it is recommended that they be arranged so that two can be printed on one sheet of good quality coated paper, the sheet to be folded and sewn into the book with a regular signature. Otherwise, it should have a sufficiently wide inner margin to allow it to be folded around a signature and sewn into the book. Illustrations must never be tipped in.

Illustrations should not be an appendage to a book; they should be an integral part of it. In an ideal book they should be made with the type page in mind, becoming in the finished book a part of or complement to the type page. Books can possess no real unity where the pictures do not fit in with the general typographic format. Illustrations reproduced by relief processes which will permit their being printed upon the same wove or laid paper used for the body of the book are acceptable. For those which cannot be reproduced with line cuts, reproduction by an offset process that permits the use of ordinary book papers for both illustration and type is recommended. If illustrations are in half-tone and no alternative is presented, they should be treated in the same manner as color plates. In this case, the advisability of leaving them out altogether should be considered seriously.

Experimentation with new forms of lithographic reproduction is encouraged.

Margins

Margins should always be determined with the likelihood of future rebinding in mind. Inasmuch as the sewing methods usually employed in rebinding (machine oversewing and stapling) tend to reduce margins more than ordinary long-on sewing, it is suggested that an unusually wide inner margin be provided. Outer margins should be proportionately large to allow for trimming if the book is ever rebound. Whatever method of sewing is used originally, its effect upon the inner margin should be taken into consideration by the designer so that the proportion of the other margins will not be destroyed. It is recommended that the inner margin be not less than three-quarters of an inch from the sewing to the edge of the type page.

Believing that a book made in accordance with these specifications will be sufficiently staunch to obviate the necessity of rebinding throughout the normal life of the book, we feel it is unwise to suggest the possibility of future rebinding any more definitely than has been done in the above section.

Ink

It is recommended that only the best grade of black ink be used. There can be little economy in using cheap and inferior ink. A sharp black impression, uniform throughout the book, is the only acceptable kind of printing, and it must be recognized In most cases, however, it is the fault of the printer in careless make-ready when one page prints light and the next dark.

Possibly it is not generally realized that library patrons are in most cases sensitive to printing faults like this. They might find difficulty in stating specifically that uneven impression in a particular book was reason for their not taking it, but they quickly recognize when something is disagreeable. It is therefore most important that the dictates of good bookmaking be heeded in securing a sharp, clean, even impression and an accurate register.

Sewing

The long-on sewing ordinarily used in book manufacture is too weak to stand up under library use. Stapling (in which the needle goes straight through each sheet from the front of the book to the back), and oversewing, to a lesser degree, make a book more difficult to open, and narrows the inner margin somewhat. Nevertheless, these types of sewing are very strong, and for the books under consideration machine oversewing is recommended. Good oversewing will remain in good condition after most bindings have fallen apart. When reinforced by a strong super and good glue a high degree of permanence is secured.

Also the sewing on tapes is recommended. A machine is manufactured by Krause that uses tapes without any great increase in cost. A method of sewing long-on through a reinforcement put in the center and on the back of a signature reduces to a minimum the possibility of tears in the paper at the fold. It seems probable that the cost involved in sewing books in this manner would be somewhat greater than that of other methods, although actual practice may prove the reverse to be true.

End Papers

It is recommended that end papers be of a superior grade of wove paper which will not crack and break at the hinge. The hinge is one of the weakest spots in the binding of the usual trade book, and it is essential that it be given all the support possible.

The end papers should carry no illustrations, and particularly no maps or tables essential to the book. In rebinding, the end papers usually suffer destruction, and should therefore be blank.

End papers should be of white stock or of some neutral tint that will harmonize well with the outside cloth, the stained top, the tone of the paper, and with the general atmosphere of the book. This will present a problem in design in each individual case, the solution of which will depend upon the designer's experience and taste. Eccentric patterns and distracting designs on end papers are in most instances undesirable. Quietness and unobtrusiveness are the keynote here.

There is a difference of opinion among librarians as to the suitability of illustrated end papers in expensive editions. There is none as regards popular priced editions.

In any case the end papers should cover the hinge. It is the usual practice of the library binder to leave the strip of reinforcement at the hinge exposed to view, increasing the unsightliness of this part of the book. There is no reason we know of why the end papers should not cover this bit of cloth, for the gain in attractiveness would be very great. Visible reinforcement may be excused only when the hinge is made of the same material as that in which the book is bound.

Hinge Reinforcement

The hinge is probably the most vulnerable spot in the entire book, and should receive the serious attention of the manufacturer. In library rebindings its weakness is overcome by a reinforcing strip of cloth that is glued to the inside of the board and glued and sewed to the first signature. The bulk of the strain exerted upon the hinge in handling the book thus falls upon this reinforcement, rather than upon the super and binding cloth as is usually the case. This method of reinforcement is recommended for library reprints providing it can be secured at sufficiently low cost. Strict compliance with the recommendations for the best quality book cloths and backlinings makes the use of this reinforcing strip decreasingly essential.

As mentioned before, the end papers in all cases should cover the hinge in order to avoid the unsightliness of the strip of reinforcement.

Backlinings

The light cloth commonly used in commercial publishing for supers is entirely too weak. Three cloths are recommended: medium weight canton flannel; a medium weight muslin; or "legal super," a new linen mesh more finely woven than the ordinary super, and stronger, since it gives more grip to the glue. The super should extend at least one-half inch (preferably more) on the inside of the cover and be firmly glued all the way.

Binders' Board

It is recommended that only the best grade, smooth, hardrolled binders' board be used. The boards should be strong enough to withstand climatic changes and the rough usage to which they are subjected in public libraries. Sufficiently dry and weathered board should be used, board that has shown quality in the storeroom by not warping. It is strength that is important here, particularly at the corners, where rough usage first begins to tell on the boards.

The most important point in the use of boards is their proper cutting. They should be cut so that the grain runs with the back of the book, except in the case of oblong books, where the grain should be the short dimension.

Glue

Publishers' bindings are greatly at fault where glue is concerned. By using a slightly more expensive glue a much longer life could be secured. It is recommended that a high grade flexible glue be used. If economies must be made, they should be made with some other constituent of the book. Good glue is all-important.

It is essential that glue be liberally applied to the back of the book, filling whatever space has been left between signatures by the rounding process, and allowing the super to "grip" firmly the largest area possible. The super must also be firmly glued to the boards.

Book Cloths

Ordinary book cloths which are unsuited to library use fail chiefly for two reasons: they are too fragile to stand up under hard wear, or they quickly become grimy and present a disreputable appearance upon the shelves. It is essential that only those cloths which experience has shown will resist hard wear should be considered. It is believed that there are many attractive book cloths which are commonly used by publishers that will meet this requirement satisfactorily. For general library use, library buckram is hardly excelled, and it can be used most attractively. It is recommended that the cost of using library buckram for library reprints be carefully investigated. If it is at all within the range of possibility, library buckram should be used. Otherwise, strong, durable cloths which contain a minimum of filling are recommended.

Methods of waterproofing book cloths so that they may be washed are not universally popular, except, possibly, in the matter of children's books. The librarian's only alternative, where he has the power of choice, is to specify dark cloths so that the dirt, which use will inevitably deposit, will be as unnoticeable as possible. For this reason the general recommendation is made that dark cloths be favored. Deterioration in the attractiveness of a book means that that book becomes more and more idle, and an inactive book becomes in time a distinct loss to a library. Experiments with rough, unfinished cloths in the darker shades are suggested. Aero and balloon cloths are serviceable. Cloths which, in the experience of the designer, have shown a tendency to pick up dirt quickly should be avoided. This is particularly true of all cloths in light shades.

Peroxyline coated cloths and cloths having artificially embossed surface patterns (especially those made in imitation of more expensive materials such as leather and vellum) are objectionable, for such fabrics are all too clearly imitations, and as a rule have only a fragile cloth basis. The design is merely embossed in the sizing which is added later.

It is suggested that cover designs be simple, and that cover printing be deeply stamped in good quality binder's gold. It is essential that author and title appear on the back, and that the lettering run horizontally when the book is standing on the shelf, except in the more unusual cases in which the book is too thin to take author and title across the back; in such cases necessity demands that they run along the back. Books of customary library size, however, never lie upon shelves, so that a title running along the back is considerably more annoying than useful. Easy readability should be the aim in view in planning this part of the book.

In arranging the lettering and design on the back, another important point should be considered. Most libraries place the "call number" on the back of the book near the bottom as it stands on the shelf. For this purpose a space not less than one inch wide and not less than one inch above the lower edge of the volume should be left free from lettering or design.

Stained Tops

Stained tops, in general, are recommended, particularly if the color used is dark enough to make the dust which collects there relatively unnoticeable. When the color is judiciously selected to harmonize with the color of the book cloth, staining adds much to the general attractiveness and liveliness of the external appearance of the book.

Sprinkled tops, and sprinkled top, side and bottom serve the same purpose to a degree, although a book with sprinkled edges is felt to be less attractive than one with stained top alone. A mixture of stained top and sprinkled side and bottom on the same book is by no means as satisfactory, from the standpoint of design, as the stained top alone. Staining is to be preferred to sprinkling.

Labels

The use of paper labels, pasted on the back and front cover of a book and carrying author, title and publisher, is not recommended. There are two disadvantages to the use of labels: they are likely to be torn partly or completely off after a short period of use, and they tend to become dirty and unsightly very quickly. Any other method of fixing this information on the back of a book is satisfactory as long as it is clearly visible and remains so throughout the normal life of the book.

Corners

Much criticism has always been made of the corners of books in publishers' covers, because the weakness of the cloth and of the boards it covers results in smashed, frayed and otherwise unsightly corners after very little use. To remedy this defect in rebound books, corners have been reinforced by an extra fold of cloth, or have been slightly rounded to avoid the vulnerability of the pointed corner. From the standpoint of wear the round corner is probably the most satisfactory. The reinforced corner commonly used by rebinders seems for all practical purposes to be strong enough, and is not greatly objectionable as a consideration of design. The ordinary corner, while undoubtedly least offensive as a matter of design, is, on the other hand, fully as objectionable from the standpoint of wear. Soon or late, any corner will show the result of much use, the ordinary corner, of course, deteriorating most rapidly. In spite of the better lasting qualities of the round corner it is not recommended for use with these reprints. Use of the round corner represents a sacrifice in physical attractiveness not commensurate with the gain in utility. The reinforced corner is recommended unless it will run up manufacturing expense unduly. Otherwise, it is believed the ordinary corner, with its high grade board and substantial cloth as recommended, will be strong enough in ordinary cases to give satisfactory service.

Books in Press

It is recommended that books be allowed to remain in press for at least three days. Much of the weakness of ordinary binding can be traced to a neglect of this step in the manufacturing plant. Also warping is frequently caused by taking the book from the press before it is well dried, and by using green board.

REPRINTS AND PUBLISHERS' SERIES

This list of reprints and publishers' series represents the best of nearly a hundred which have been considered. It may be of interest and help to mention the chief faults which caused the exclusion of those series which do not appear. These faults may be characterized by the following generalities: those that are objectionable (1) because of size, (2) because of the inferior quality of their manufacture, (3) because of disagreeable typography.

Series issued in an excessively small format have been excluded because they are easily lost upon library shelves, because they may be readily concealed upon the person of the acquisitive borrower, but particularly because they are usually provided with such limited margins that rebinding becomes impossible, so that the life of the small book is considerably shorter than the period of use the librarian has the right to expect. Pocket editions are undesirable for these reasons. It may be suggested that the size of the Modern readers' series (71 x41) be used as the dividing line between series that can and cannot be recommended.

Certain series were excluded because of the low grade of the materials used in their manufacture. Paper, ink and binding materials are concerned here. On the whole, only a small group offends for these reasons. The paper and ink used in the making of books in this country justify little criticism but binding is almost universally bad, and there is consequently no alternative but to rebind early in an attractive and permanent form.

In the matter of typography we have a much more difficult problem to face. If, in reading, we begin to realize that the type of the book in hand is tiring to the eye, we are likely to assume that the type is too large, or, more frequently, too small. This is indeed often the case, yet such faults as inadequate leading between the lines or the illegibility of the particular type face employed, are the true contributing causes of eyestrain. Fortunately, contemporary typographic practice is almost always above criticism on this point. What is often not realized, however, is that many of these series, otherwise satisfactory enough, have been reprinted from plates made thirty to fifty years ago. Types used in England and America in the last half of the nineteenth century were generally those we are accustomed to call "small type" although the fault often lay in the printing rather than in the type size. In America these types were used as late as 1910 and after, though less frequently than before. Broadly speaking, therefore, it may be assumed that books printed from plates made before 1900 or 1905 are not easily readable. Careful attention to copyright dates will, in many cases, give the clew to a book's desirability, though this rule should not be taken too literally. Only a thorough knowledge of individual examples will suffice.

It should be mentioned that the series listed below do not always fully meet the requirements laid down. Many individual titles of several of the series included have been reprinted from old plates like those discussed above. In general, however, the plates have been kept in good condition, and skilful workmanship has been applied throughout the printing processes. Criticism directed at these books because of their type is modified by the manner in which the reprinting was done.

The popular copyright fiction titles as issued by A. L. Burt & Company, and Grosset and Dunlap are not strongly recommended as long as they are issued in their present format. Libraries have to use them, however. The plates that have been used are in practically all cases satisfactory. On the other hand, quality of the paper, binding and workmanship that goes into the making of these books is inferior. They are not designed to stand up under constant wear, and they rapidly deteriorate in libraries.

At least two series should be mentioned because of their excellent editing: Everyman's library (Dutton), and the Modern library. Generally speaking, both of these series are unsatisfactory, however, because of their small size and because of many obvious typographic faults. But there are instances, particularly in the case of non-fiction, where certain titles issued in these series are to be preferred above the same titles found in typographically superior editions.

The book selector will also need to watch series designed for children in order to be sure he is ordering complete and authentic texts.
